WASHINGTON TERRITORY. u Hazwell's Impressions—It is Not a "La of Pure Delight,"

A sea-passage of thirteen hours from the torpid town of Victoria, brought me to land at the port of Tacoma in Washington Territory. The ride over the water was a dull one to me. At other times and under other circumstances I might have admired the long lines of ugged and forcest-covered coast that could be seen at intervals first men one side and these withous coupation.

Jy scaled, Alway atternation of the stuffer of the story of the admired the long lines of rugged and forest-covered coast that could be seen at intervals, first upon one side and then upon the other of Puget Sound, after I had passed the stormy Strait Juan de Fuca. But, I was not feeling well, and I took no catisfaction in looking out acroes the waters to catch uncertain gliupses of land as we would pass capes and promontories. Sometimes our vessel would be quite near the beach, which was sandy, low, white and desolate-looking. Sometimes again we would be entirely out of sight of land. What shore I saw, back from the immediate beach, was heavily timbered with pine, which in many places was on fire, and the smoke arose in dense columns like the scriptures say it arises from that bottomless pit, whence it ascends upward for ever and ever. Only once in a great while did I observe any signs that man had taken up his abode on those forest-covered shores. A small farm might sometimes be seen on the brow of some frowing bluid; but the farms necessarily were small, for so dense is the timber that it takes almost an ordinary life.

some frowning that; but the farms neces-sarily were small, for so dense is the tim-ber that it takes almost an ordinary life-time to open up two or three fields.

I pazed only two towns on that yoyage, Fort Townsend and Seattle. The latter was built on a high bluff overlooking the Fort Townsend and Seattle. The latter was built on a high bluff overlooking the water, and 'presented a fine appearance. We passed a ship or two going down the Sound; but, for all this, the passage was a very dull and uninteresting one, and the day will be remembered (by me, at least,) as one of monotonous nothingness. To make it more disagreeable, we were six hours behind time—and, it seemed to me, shout sixty years behind the times. So, it was with something of relief and exultation that I stepped upon the wharf when we hauled up alongside Tacoma. I think I was considerably like Pindar of old, "who leaped the first ashore." I went out on the first gang-plank, elbowed my way to the first omnibus and was soon being slowly trandled up the steep bluff to the town, which stands on a high and dreary eminence overlooking the sea. On the crest of the bluff I noticed a battery of artillery, the guns pointing out over the water; but I do not know whether the battery is there by orders of the Goyennent or by some Fourth of July organization—nor do I care.

As the omnibus reached the top of the grade and was pussing into the city, I took my last look at that dismal expanse of sea—

PUGET SOUND.

If I never see it sgain I must always remember it as a lonesome, cheerless water. My last sight of it fell upon a field of brine, tideless, wayeless, motionless, lifeless, dead. The mists of evening and the moke from the forest fires in the country haven a sampling in long, blue peyond were icommingling in long, blue treaks just above the water line, and in a noment more all was lost from sight, and noment more all was lest from sight, and I was in the city of Tacoma.

This was the eccond time I had been in Washington Territory. The other time I had seen only a small portion of it near the northern border; but this time I had come to see more of it, and to observe what sort of country it was. It was my intention to are not sort of the strength of the strength quainted with the characteristics of the district and of the people.

Immigration is attracted largely toward Weshington Territory. It is a good contry, but I have seen places that suited me better. I went inland as much as one hundred and fifty miles from Tacoma, but I did not see any of the great truit orchards that are advertised. Fruit seemed as little cultivated not accepted as nearly. as little cultivated and as cearce as nearly as inthe entrypage and as ceares as nearly all the other necessities of life. Fernaps I did not see the fruit districts. I am certain that I did not. The farms have he appearance of having been recently cleared of the heavy forests of pine that lately grew on them and still grow on all sides. I saw very few patches of ground that are not or were not recently wood. that are not or were not recently wood and. In many of the Western States the land. In many of the Western States the tarms are already cleared of timber ready for the plow. But, in this Territory every man must clear his own farm, or buy one which somebody else cleared.

I have never heed in Arkansas, but I have a very vivid conception of the State and people from reading the Arkansaw Trateler; and from a personal acquaintence in Washington Territory I am prone is liken it and its people to Arkansas and he people there. The thrift and industry which generally are to be found in new countries are much wanting here. The people are pessessed of innate Irachnes. They clear a little patch of ground for potatoes, pumpkins and cabbage, and then estile down and trust Providence for the rest.

ettle down and trust Providence for the rest.

In a country of so much timber they might have convenient and elegant dwellings at nominal cost, but they live for the most part in chantles, ccarcely better projected against the rain and sun than was Diegenese in his tub. A hut is built in the edge of the woode, and a shed of round poles for a harn. The family searerally a dezen in number, and universally red-headed, all find room in the hut; but the wash tub, ash-hopper, grindstone and saw-horse are crowded out, and are centent to find a pizce immediately in front of the door, where they are rendered useful as well as ornamental by furnishing a root for the turkeys and objectes. The magnanimous ash-hopper also provides beneath it a neet for fourteen or fifteen hogs, and a rendezvous and starting place for two or three ash-hoppers still of lieas, if they were all gathered unto one place. The geese stand in

BAGGED BEGINENTS midway between the house and barn, ready to run either to the one or the other as a chance of geiling something to eat presents itself; and about six times every hour, night and day, they unit their voices in four or five unearthly yells to let the Pacific Coast know that they are still on mercy's side of the grave.

hour, night and day, they unite their voices in four or five unearthly yells to let the Pacific Coast know that they are still on mercy's gide of the grays.

As to the barn, it is always a sorry looking outfit. One alope of the roof is overed with pine clap boards, the other side is not yet covered; but a stack of clsp-boards in the back ground gives encouragement that the farmer has not yet given up all idea of covering the other elope of the roof sometime. Wild hay is cut from the edge of the woods, and point to the barn, is filled a quarter fail. No stable room is provided within the barn, as the horses and mules are ited outside, where they support life by reaching through the cracks and pulling out hay and potato vines.

I went about through several counties, sometimes in the care, sometimes in magons, sometimes afoot, just as convenience and necessity dictated. I had an opportunity of seeing every phace of life in the Territory, and my conclusion was, that for ease and "sweet doing nothing," this is the most capital place in the world. No anxieties or perplexities of life can worry the Washington Territorians. They take the world and weather as they come. worry the Washington Territorians. They take the world and weather as they come, and get more less and contented all the time. I don't believe that one family in ten subscribes for a newspaper. When one enters a house the only books be finds are "Pilgrim's Progress," "Saints Reat" and "Lorenco Dow." Once in awhile you may find a "Poultry Doctor." I'll bet almost anything that a book agent would stare to death quicker in Washington Territory than he would in the Cannibal Islands.

All in all, the time I spent in that conn-

All In all, the time I spent in that country was pleasant, for I enjoy being with honest people, even if they are as lazy as Ocnus. Whatever else may be said, the honesty of these people cannot be questioned. I surmise that the fact of the case is, they were so houest that they were starved out of the Eastern States and came here to case and the parts of the Money and Stock Markets.

were starved out of the Eastern States and came here in cearch of a paradise regained, where the rascals cease from troubling and the lazy are at rest.

I passed on for several days and at length found myself upon the bank of the Columbia, near two hundred miles from Tacoma—so lar from that town that I decided not to go back to it, but to seek new fields and new people in other regions.

A GREAT city is not half so fall of telograph wires as the human body is of nerves. The two great centres from which they all proceed are, roughly speaking, the brain and the spine. Every function of the body and power of the mind is intimately associated with the nerves. This wonderful system of nerves of feeling and motion is admirably shown in the manikin at Logan & Co.'s drug store, bridge corner, Main street, Wheeling, W.
